blend of CSI and Harry Potter. A mutilated body in Crawley. A killer on the loose. The prime suspect is one Robert Weil, possibly an associate of the twisted wizard known as the Faceless Man. Or maybe just a garden-variety serial killer. Before apprentice wizard and Police Constable Peter Grant can even get his head 'round the case, two more are dropped in his lap: a town planner has gone under a tube train, and there's a stolen grimoire for Grant to track down. So far, so London. But then Peter gets word of something very odd happening on a housing estate designed by a nutter, built by charlatans, and inhabited by the truly desperate. Is there a connection? And if there is, why oh why did it have to be South of the River—in the jurisdiction of some pretty prickly local river spirits?

This book is all about the trials and tribulations one man goes through and gets to a point where I question how much more one person can go through. There is a saying, "God does not give us more than we can handle." This gets pushed to the limit on how much is enough. It is only by the grace of God that I got through it. This book only contains half of my life, and I went through more in half my life than most people do in all of their life. I learned as time went on that it is faith that got me through, and you will learn that faith will get you through. Even when you think you can't go through any more, God will get you through anything. You will read what God got me through.

This book is a story quilt of personal narratives constructed from in-depth, case study interviews of five single-parent mothers. Unbroken Homes chronicles their journeys as mothers, daughters, and women, in relationships and in solitude, displaying their stories in their own words like the squares of a multicolored quilt. As a feminist work, Unbroken Homes breaks through the stigma associated with broken homes, and provides a new perspective on the reorganization of American families.
